About this Degree Programme

For companies, tax authorities and governments alike, tax issues must be viewed within an increasingly international context. Have you picked up on this trend, too, and would you like to capitalise on it by offering expert international tax advice for private households and companies? Then earn your degree in our English-taught undergraduate programme International Taxation and Law, B.A. and obtain the qualifications you will need for your professional future.

Practical relevance permeates all levels of this degree programme. You will benefit directly from the extensive experience of your professors, which includes work with tax specialists in both medium-sized consulting firms and the "Big Four", as well as years of work as tax advisors or lawyers themselves.

You will gather international experience through numerous international partnerships and joint projects with our university partners around the world. To ensure your success during your studies, you will also enjoy a supportive learning environment with modern facilities, an extensive library collection of specialist publications, and a laboratory specifically designed for Taxation and Law students.

Your path to a degree will start with tax law at the national level. From there, you will delve into international tax law through specialisation modules. Through a logical and meaningful combination of courses in both economics and law, you will learn not only how to tackle taxation issues from an economic and legal point of view, but also develop complex, yet suitable solutions to these issues.

Start your tax career with us!
